Asian Studies Transformation of the Vietnamese society: in the context of modernization and globalization Prof. Dang Nguyen Anh will focus on migration (Oct.10,17) This lecture is designed to provide a foundation in the complex nature of the migration process, and to underscore the importance of migration for understanding social change. It draws on readings and on recent examples of excellent research on migration in population studies (broadly conceived) and to a lesser extent in Sociology. In addition to these learning goals, the lecture is also designed to help students produce a written essay that will be useful for the current stage in graduate school. Prof. Vu Manh Loi will focus on the family and people's life (Oct.24,31) Transformation of Marriage and the Family in Changing Viet Nam The lecture includes presentation of (1) socio-demographic structural changes of marriage and the family in Viet Nam during the past 50 years, and (2) changes in family values and relations associated with the structural changes.

【授業計画と内容】
Prof. Dang Nguyen Anh Human migration and its attendant social, cultural, economic and environmental changes is one of the most fundamental ways in which societies change over time. Migration brings about changes at multiple scales, from the individual to the community and nation. We begin with a discussion of the motivations for migration, because we cannot understand how migration will or will not transform lives and societies without a clear picture of why people move. Nor can we make successful public policies to accommodate, encourage, or prevent migration without knowing migration selectivity. We then discuss the ways in which migration affects migrants themselves, their families at home and in destinations, and the home and destination communities. In this regard, specific foci are on remittances, international migration and transnational families within the regions of East and Southeast Asia. Students are expected to attend all classes, arrive in a timely manner, and participate fully in classes and discussions. They are also expected to engage critically with reading materials. There are enough materials on migration.
Prof. Vu Manh Loi 1st Section(week 1): Socio-demographic structural changes of marriage and the family in Viet Nam during the past 50 years This section presents statistical data reflecting general patterns of changes in age at marriage, living arrangement after marriage, fertility transition, household structure, gender and household headship in the context of socio-economic and policy changes of the period. This section provides overall multi-dimensional context of marriage and family change to prepare the audience for the 2nd Section which focuses specifically on changes of family values and relations.
2nd Section (week 2): Changes in family values and relations associated with the structural changes This section include discussions of the following issues:

- Changes in mating values from parents' and youth's perspectives;
- Gender and age shift of power and authority in the family;
- Gender division of labor within the family;
- Domestic violence;
- Inter-generational relations;
- Value of children;
- Old-aged security;
- Emerging issues: divorces, separated, single-mother families, and homo-sexuality.
