

Ms Mariko Adachi

Ms Adachi specializes in international cooperation in education and human resource development. Her professional career includes experience working in the US, Bangladesh, Egypt, Yemen, Jordan, and other parts of the Middle East. Her recent experience at a non-profit organization in Washington DC gave her a solid background in industry-academia collaboration.

Previously, Ms Adachi was on a two-year assignment as a JICA volunteer in Jordan, and since then has engaged in official development assistance (ODA) projects in the field of education. She works with multiple stakeholders, such as universities and international non-profit organizations (NPOs), for human resource development of the youth. Her research is related to factors influencing gender parity in terms of access to education in Jordan. Ms Adachi received an MA degree from the Institute of Education, University College London, UK.
