

Dr Paola Sanoni (BBA, MA, PhD)

Dr Sanoni's professional interest is development of an institutional strategy for internationalization of higher education. Currently, she is in charge of the University Social Responsibility approach and conducts institutional representation at the USRN network. She supported the creation and activities of Kyoto University North American Center (2018-2020), and currently coordinates the ANZOR network (Australia and New Zealand researchers' network) promoting international collaborations with partner institutions in Oceania.

She has experience working in the healthcare industry (GE Healthcare-Japan) and over 10 years of experience working in universities in Australia, Japan, and six countries of Latino America in positions oriented to promote institutional branding, product development based on collaborative research, strategic partnership and philanthropic efforts, and implementation of the Trans-Pacific Human Capital Development program at the University of Tsukuba (2015-2018). Additionally, she worked on international accreditation assessment, undergraduate and post-graduate program design, strategic partnership for research development and industry collaborations, tailoring training programs, mentoring international students, and working on education and research at the service of communities.

Dr Sanoni's research topic is on the implementation of Telemedicine networks and inclusion policies for public education and health in rural areas. She was as research manager for applied research with collaboration of the industry, academy, and government, and worked for several years conducting projects of ICT's for development in Peru, Colombia, and Cuba financed by international cooperation agencies.

Dr Sanoni obtained her PhD (Politics) and MA (International Relations) from the University of Tsukuba, and holds a Bachelor of Business Administration (BBA) from the Pontificia Universidad Catolica del Peru (PUCP).
